

The New Speaker Guide

How do you talk about language?

How do you tell people about your experiences talking new languages, and the reasons you have for deciding to learn other languages ?

New Speaker Stories

This mini-publication introduces the work of The New Speakers Network, a partnership of 28 countries working together to better understand the benefits and challenges involved in becoming a New Speaker.

This booklet is one element within the exhibition in the Milk Café entitled 'New Speakers Stories', part of the Refugee Festival Scotland 2017.

It accompanies the photographs and film made by Deirdre MacKenna, which have been drawn from new research funded by the EU COST programme The New Speakers Network.

The New Speakers Network is chaired by Bernadette O'Rourke of Heriot-Watt University and is made up of members from 28 EU countries.

The New Speakers Network focuses on the dynamics involved in becoming a New Speaker in European communities in which globalisation, mobility and transnational networking are transforming how people use languages.

The aim is to develop understanding and promote awareness of the experiences of multilingual people by investigating the challenges and opportunities they experience when acquiring, using and being understood as a New Speaker of a language.

The term New Speaker refers to people who learn languages in addition to what they would consider their 'native' or 'own' language, or their 'mother-tongue'.

In doing so, New Speakers transcend the dominant culture and society around them by broadening their horizons and adapting to new linguistic and social opportunities.

Members of The New Speakers Network are exploring the linguistic experiences of 3 groups of New Speakers, including

- those who speak a minority language as their mother tongue (such as Gaelic or Basque) so are used to adopting other, more dominant languages,

- immigrants, who adopt new languages as part of their integration over long periods of time, and

- transnational workers who might adopt and use language for shorter periods for employment reasons.

There are no universally accepted criteria for distinguishing a language from a dialect.

Scholars and other interested parties often disagree about the linguistic, historical and social status of minority languages and their relationships with the dominant national languages.

(A minority language is a language spoken by a minority of the population of a territory.)

There are over one hundred languages spoken in Scotland

Today, the main language spoken in Scotland is English, while Scots and Scottish Gaelic are the indigenous minority languages and, amongst others, Arabic, Basque, Bengali, British Sign Language, Cantonese, French, Gujarati, Greek, Hindi, Irish, Italian, Mandarin, Polish, Punjabi, Somali, Swedish, Turkish and Urdu are also widely spoken.

The quotes and information on the following pages are extracts from conversations between Deirdre MacKenna and Agata Urbanska, Brian Thunder, Daniele Sambo, Hanneke Scott-Van Weil, Leena Nammari, Miren Manias, Nadifa Essa and Nina Bacos, who shared their stories and opinions about being a New Speaker in Scotland today.

all language is an exchange

it's just another code

it's all about circles and relationships

I need to understand my children my neighbours

my work

so many people have a different first language we have a bond between us knowing only one culture makes you afraid of other cultures it means freedom, freedom to be me they don't ask about my journey

I still make mistakes

I need time people don't see how rich these languages are or the riches these languages can give to them here, people have no idea what languages I speak language allows me to be part of daily life

I loose my words

sometimes they fly away sometimes arrive too late they underestimate me

people are very impatient

it's frustrating

they have the potential to make trouble for me

I don't want to insult anyone and I don't want to be insulted people in power positions can deny what I need

if you cannot speak you are in a cage

they speak about me when I'm sitting right beside them

it's just another code

it helps us to understand Other People and there are a lot of Other People in the world learning a new language is difficult for everyone speaking with an accent isn't always a good idea...

we all make paths between languages some make an extra effort some recede

it's always an exchange on both sides

New Speaker Stories

Language can define individual and collective identities.

It is a part of every exchange we have with other people, yet it is difficult to describe and imagine.

Without language, it's difficult to gain employment, access education and social services and join in with our neighbours, friends, families and community.

Yet the processes whereby people learn new languages and become legitimate speakers of these languages are complex and not always well understood.
